THE TRI-WEEKLY YEOMAN. Highly Important from the South-Secession of South Carolina,

It will be seen by our telegraphic dispatches that the Convention of South Carolina, now in session at Charleston, has decided by a unanimous vote that that State should secede from the Union. On the receipt of this important news in Wash ington, notwithstanding the fact of it having been confidently anticipated by all the Southern, and by many Northern members, it produced a pro-found sensation. In alluding to the passage of the Pacific Railroad bill in the House, Mr. Garnett, of Virginia, spoke of the utter inefficiency of any such enactment as a national measure, intimating that the whole South would unite with

South Carolina in seceding from the Union. Our corps of contributors for the coming year will be so large, and will embrace such a variety of eminent talent, that every department of literature will receive the particular attention of some one competent to do it ample and special justice. Whether it be popular romance scientific essay, historical sketch, scholastic disquisition, spicy paragraph, pathetic ballad, humorous poem, old-fashioned love story, timely editorial, or any other ingredent of popular and elevated journalism, that is to be furnished, the Ledger corps will be sufficient for the task. In fact, our contributors will send us from week to week much more matter than we can possibly use, so that we shall always have a fresh and superabundant supply, from which to select the very best. These facts, taken in connection with our largely increased means, facilities, and experience, warrant us, we think, in promising our readers a family paper for the year 1861 which will be more interesting and instructive, and in every respect more valuable, even than the LEDGER has been in the past.

As an indication of the popularity of the LEDGER, we need only state the simple fact that its circulation is larger than that of any other ten literary papers in the country. Its great success is owing to the fact that we secure the best writers in the country, and spare no expense in getting up the best family paper—apaper of high moral tone. The exalted reputation of its contributors, the practical and invariably pure and healthy character of all its articles the care which is taken that not even one offensive word shall appear in its columns, and the superiority of its Tales and Sketches, have gained for the NEW YORK LEDGER a position that no literary paper has ever before reached.

—Anna Cora Rivchie, of Richmond, Va., and Col. Walter B. Dunlar, the author of the popular "Forest Sketches," which were published in our columns ome time since, will each begin a story in the LEDGER and in the new year. Mrs. SOUTHWORTH is also negaged upon a new tale.

OF KENTUCKY. On his Proposed Compromise of the Slavery Question,

IN SENATE, Tuesday, Dec. 18, 1860. Mr. CRITTENDEN said: I am gratified, Mr. President, to see in the various propositions which have been made, such a universal anxiety to save the country from the dangerous dissensions which now prevail; and I have under a very serious ew, and without the least ambitious feeling whatver connected with it, prepared a series of constitutional amendments, which I desire to offer to the Senate, hoping that they may form, in part at least, some basis for measures that may settle the controverted questions which now so much agitate our country. Certainly, sir, I do not proe now any elaborate discussion of the subject. Before presenting these resolutions, however, to the Senate, I desire to make a few remarks explanatory of them, that the Senate may under-Stand their general scope.

The questions of an alarming character are those which have grown out of the controversy between the Northern and Southern sections of our country in relation to the rights of the slaveolding States in the Territories of the United ates, and in relation to the rights of the tizens of the latter in their slaves. I have deavored by these resolutions to meet all these questions and causes of discontent, and by mendments to the Constitution of the United tates, so that the settlement, if we can happily agree on any, may be permanent, and leave no ause for future controversy. These resolutions propose, then, in the first place, in substance, the restoration of the Missouri Compromise, extending the line throughout the Territories of the United States to the eastern border of California, recognizing slavery in all the territory south of that line, and prohibiting slavery in all the territory north of it; with a provision, however, that when any of those Territories, North or South, are formed into States, they shall then be at liberty to exclude or admit slavery as they please; and that, in the one case or the other, it shall be no objection to their admission into the Union. In this way, sir, I propose to settle the question, both as to territory and slavery, so far as it regards the Territories of the United States. propose, sir, also, that the Constitution shall be so amended as to declare that Congress shall have no power to abolish slavery in the District of Columbia so long as slavery exists in the States of Maryland and Virginia; and that they shall have no power to abolish slavery in any of the places under their special jurisdiction within the Southern States.

These are the constitutional amendments which I propose, and embrace the whole of them in regard to the questions of Territory and slavery. There are other propositions in relation to grievances, and in relation to controversies, which I suppose are within the jurisdiction of Congress, and may be removed by the action of Congress. propose, in regard to legislative action, that ne Fugitive Slave law, as it is commonly called, all be declared by the Senate to be a constitu tional act, in strict pursuance of the Constitution. I propose to declare that it has been decided by he Supreme Court of the United States to be constitutional, and that the Southern States are ntitled to a faithful and complete execution of hat law, and that no amendment shall be made ereafter to it which will impair its efficiency But, thinking that it would not impair its efficiency, I have proposed amendments to it in two particulars. I have understood from gentlemen of the North that there is objection to the provision ng a different fee where the commissioner dedes to deliver the slave to the claimant, from that which is given where he decides to discharge the alleged slave; the law declares that in the latter case he shall have but five dollars, while in the other he shall have ten dollars-twice the amount in one case than in the other. The reason for this is very obvious. In case he delivers the servant to his claimant, he is required to draw out a lengthy certificate, stating the principal and substantial grounds on which his decision ests, and to return him either to the marshal or the claimant to remove him to the State from which he escaped. It was for that reason that a arger fee was given to the commissioner, where ad the largest service to perform. But, sir, act being viewed unfavorably and with great dice, in a certain portion of the country, this as regarded as very obnoxious, because it seemed to give an inducement to the commissioner to mewhat vaguely, its general terms had admitted of the construction in the Northern States that all the citizens were required, upon the summons of the marshal, to go with slave; and this is regarded as obnoxious. They have said, "in the Southern States you make no such requisition on the citizen;" nor do we, sir. The section, construed according to the intention of the framers of it, I suppose, only intended that the marshal should have the same right in the exhas in all other cases of process that he is required sistance where he is resisted in the execution of nis duty, or where having executed his duty by the arrest, an attempt is made to rescue the slave. I propose such an amendment as will obviate this ifficulty and limit the right of the master and the duty of the citizen to cases where, as in regard to all other process, persons may be called upon to ts to the Constitution which I here propose, nd certain other provisions of the Constitution f, shall be unalterable, thereby forming a per ent and unchangeable basis for peace aquility among the people. Among the proons in the present Constitution, which I have amendment proposed rendered unalterable, is at provision in the first article of the Constituon which provides the rule for representation, That is to be rendered unchangeable. Another is the provision for the delivery of fugitive slaves. That is to be rendered unchangeable.

And with these provisions, Mr. President, it seems to me we have a solid foundation upon which we may rest our hopes for the restoration peace and good will among all the States in this Union, and all the people. I propose, sir, to enter into no particular discussion. I have explained the general scope and object of my pro-I have provided further, which I ought to mention, that, there having been some difficulties experienced in the courts of the United States in the South carrying into execution the laws prohibiting the African slave trade, all additions and amendments which may be necessary to those laws to render them effectual should be immediately adopted by Congress, and especially the provisions of those laws which prohibit the imortation of African slaves into the United States. I have further provided it as a recommendation to all the States of this Union, that, whereas laws have been passed of an unconstitusideration. I have been surprised to find, upon a whereas laws have been passed of an unconstitutional character, (and all laws are of that character which either conflict with the constitutional was made, which recognized the independence of was made, which recognized the independence of the character which either conflict with the constitutional was made, which recognized the independence of the character which either conflict with the constitutional was made, which recognized the independence of the character which either conflict with the constitutional character. hinder or delay the proper execution of the acts of Congress,) which laws are null and void, and of Mason and Dixon's line had but a territory of one hundred and sixty four thousand square miles yet, though null and void, they have been the source of mischief and discontent in the country we are placed. I have supposed that it would not mend to the States, both North and South, the of the acts of Congress, or which, in their operation and in their application; have been made use of for the purpose of such hindrance and opposi-causes of discontent pervading the land; and, as far as I am capable of doing so, I have endeavored to propose a remedy for them. I am far from be and the acquisitions made from Mexico. They lieving that, in the shape in which I present these have been so divided and so disposed of that the

Mr. President, great dangers surround us. The Union of these States is dear to the people of the United States. The long experience of its blessings, the mighty hopes of the future, have made it dear to the hearts of the American people. Whatever politicians may say; whatever of dissension may, in the heat of party politics, be created among our people, when you come down to the question of the existence of the Constitution, that is a question beyond all party politics; that is a question of life and death. stitution and the Union are the life of this great people—yes sir, the life of life. We all desire to preserve them, North and South; that is the miversal desire. But some of the Southern States, smarting under what they conceive to be aggressions of their Northern brethren, and of the Northern States, are not contented to con-tinue this Union, and are taking steps, formidable tinue this Union, and are taking steps, formulative steps, towards a dissolution of the Union, and towards the anarchy and the bloodshed, I fear, that are to follow. I say, sir, we are in the presence of great events. We must elevate our the street of the street contribution. selves to the level of the great occasion. party warfare about mere party questions or party measures ought now to engage our attent They are left behind; they are as dust in the The life, the existence of our country, balance. of our Union, is the mighty question; and we must elevate ourselves to all those considerations which belong to this high subject.

I hope, therefore, gentlemen will be disposed to bring the sincerest spirit of conciliation, the sincerest spirit and desire to adjust all these difficulties, and to think nothing of any little concessions of arising the sincerest spirit and desire to adjust all these difficulties, and to think nothing of any little concessions of arising the sincerest spirits. sions of opinions that they may make, if thereby the Constitution and the country can be preserved

The great difficulty here, sir-I know it, I recognize it as the difficult question, particularly with the gentleman from the North—is the ad mission of this line of division for the Territory, and the recognition of slavery on one side, and the prohibition of it on the other. The recognition of slavery on the Southern side of that line is the great difficulty—the great question with them. Now I beseech them to think, and you, Mr. President, and all, to think whether, for such a compar ative trifle as that, the Union of this country is to be sacrificed. Have we realized to ourselves the momentous consequences of such an event When has the world seen such an event? This is a mighty empire. Its existence spreads its influence throughout the civilized world. Its overthrow would be the greatest shock that civilization and free government have received; more extensive in its consequences; more fatal to mankind and to the great principles upon which the liberty of mankind depends, that the French revolution, with all its blood and with all its war and violence. And all for what? Upon questions concerning this line of division between slavery and freedom! Why, Mr. President, suppose this day all the Southern States, being re-fused this right; being refused his partition; being denied this privilege, were to separate from the Northern States, and do it peacefully, and then were to come to you peacefully and say, "let there be no war between us; let us divide fairly the Territories of the United States;" could the Northern section of the country refuse so just a What would you then give them' What would be the fair proportion? If you allowed them their fair relative proportion, would you not give them as much as is now proposed to be assigned on the Southern side of that line, line, and would they not be at liberty to carry their slaves there if they pleased? You would give them the whole of that; and then what would be its fate?

Is it upon the general principle of humanity, then, that you (addressing Republican Senators) wish to put an end to slavery, or is it to be urged by you as a mere topic and point of party controversy to sustain party power? Surely I give you credit for looking at it upon broader and more generous principles. Then, in the worst event, after you have encountered disunion, that greatest of all political calamities to the people of this country, and the disunionists come, the separa ting States come, and demand or take the portion of the Territories, they can take, and will be entitled to take, all that will now lie on the southern side of the line which I have proposed. Then they will have a right to permit slavery to exist in it, and what do you gain for the cause of antislavery? Nothing whatever. Suppose you should refuse their demand, and claim the whole for your tained the larger fee of ten dollars instead of the smaller one of five dollars. I have said let the fee be the same in both cases.

I have understood furthermore, sir, that, inas much as the fifth section of that law was worded somewhat vaguely, its general terms had ad selves? that would be a flagrant injustice which the struggle, and you would have war; and not only disunion, but all these fatal consequences would follow from your refusal now to sd, upon the summons of the marshal, to go and a slavery to exist, to recognize it as calculated into hunt up, as they express it, and arrest the slave; and this is regarded as obnoxious. They have said, "in the Southern States you make no have said, "in the Southern States you make no sir." I have done to form a State government, if such should be their will and pleasure.

Now, gentlemen, in view of this subject, in view of the mighty consequences, in view of the great events which are present before you, and of the mighty consequences which are just now to take effect, is it not better to settle the question by a division upon the line of the Missouri Compromise? For thirty years we lived quietly and peacefully under it. Our people, North and South, were accustomed to look at it as a proper and just line. Can we not do so again? We did it then to preserve the peace of the country. Now you see this Union in the most imminent danger. I declare to you that it is my solemn conviction sist in resisting opposition to the execution of that unless something be done, and something I have provided further, sir, that the amendarated and divided people in six months from this That is my firm conviction. There is no man here who deplores it more than I do; but it is my sad and melancholy conviction that that will be the consequence. fully the danger. I wish you to realize fully the consequences which are to follow. You can give increased stability to this Union; you can give an existence, a glorious existence, for great and cluding the computation three-fifths of the a permanent basis recognizing what the South nsiders as its rights; and this is the greatest of them all; it is that you should divide the terri tory by this line and allow the people South of i to have slavery when they are admitted into the tence of the Territorial government. That is all Is it not the cheapest price at which such a blessing as this Union was ever purchased? think, perhaps, or some of you, that there is no danger; that it will but thunder and pass away Do not entertain such a fatal delusion. I tell you it is not so. I tell you that as sure as we stand here disunion will progress. I fear it may swallow up even old Kentucky in its vortex-as true a State to the Union as yet exists in the whole Confederacy--unless something be done; but that you will have disunion, that anarchy and war will follow it, that all this will take place in

I want to satisfy you of the Mr. President, I rise to suggest another conthis country by Great Britain, the States north one hundred and sixty-four thousand square miles while the States south of Mason and Dixon's line had more than six hundred thousand square miles. It was so divided. Virginia shortly afterwards ceded to the United States all that noble terri tory northwest of the Ohio river, and excluded end to the States, both North and South, the peal of all such acts of theirs as were intended control or intended to obstruct the operation of the acts of Congress, or which, in their operation of the acts of Congress, or which, in their operation of the control of the congress, or which, in their operation of the control of the contr on, and that they will repeal these laws or make uch explanations or corrections of them as to revent their being used for any such mischievous feether their being used for any such mischievous. and eighty-five thousand square miles. By that I have endeavored to look with impartiality from one end of our country to the other; I have endeavored to look beyond. I intend the North. Well, let us look beyond. I intend ored to search up what appeared to me to be the to take up as little time as possible, and to avoid

North has now two millions two hundred thou sands quare miles of territory, and the South has less than one million.

Under these circumstances, when you have been so greatly magnified-1 do not complain of it; I am stating facts-when your section has been made so mighty by these great acquisitions and to a great extent with the perfect consent of the South, ought you to hesitate now upon adopt side of it nine hundred and odd thousand square miles, and leave to the South only two hundred and eighty five thousand? It will give you three times as much as it will give her. There is three times as much land in your portion as in hers. The South has already occupied some of it, and it is in States; but altogether the South gets by this division two hundred and eighty-five thousand square miles, and the North nine hundred thousand. The result of the whole of it is, that the North has two million two hundred thousand square miles and the South only one million.

I mention this as no reproach, as no upbraiding as no complaint-none at all. I do not speak in that spirit; I do not address you in that temper. But these are the facts, and they ought, it seems to me, to have some weight; and when we come to make a peace-offering, are we to count it, are we price, and the dearest price, for all the concession asked to be made; you have the firmer establishment of your Union; you have the restoration of peace and tranquility, and the hopes of a hty future, all secured by this concession How dearly must one individual, or two individuals, or many individuals, value their private opinions if they think them more important to the world than this mighty interest of the Union and Government of the United States!

Sir, it is a cheap sacrifice. It is a glorious sa-This Union cost a great deal to establish it; it cost the yielding of much of public opinion and much of policy, besides the direct or indirect cost of it in all the war to establish the independence of this country. When it was done, Gen. Washington himself said, Providence has helped us, or we could not have accomplished this thing. And this gift of our wisest men; this great worl of their hands; this work in the foundation and the structure of which Providence herself, with her benignant hand, helped-are we to give it all up for such small considerations? The present exasperation, the present feeling of disunion, is the result of a long continued controversy on the up for such small considerations? subject of slavery and of territory. I shall not attempt to trace that controversy; it is unnecessary to the occasion, and might be harmful. In relation to such controversies I will say, though right on the other. Right and wrong in this world and in all such controversies are mingled togeth-

I forbear now any discussion or any reference to the right or wrong of the controversy, the mere party controversy; but, in the progress of party, we now come to a point where party ceases o deserve consideration, and the preservation of the Union demands our highest and our greatest exertions. To preserve the constitution of the country is the highest duty of the Senate, the highest duty of Congress—to preserve it and to perpetuate it, that we may hand down the glories which we have received to our children and to our posterity, and to generations far beyond us We are, Senators in positions where history is to take notice of the course we pursue. History is to record us. Is it to record that when the de struction of the Union was imminent; when we saw it tottering to its fall; when we saw brothers arming their hands for hostility with one another, we stood quarreling about points of party politics, about questions which we attempted to sanctify and to consecrate by appealing to our consciences as the source of them? Are we to allow such fearful catastrophes to occur while we stand trifling away our time? While we stand thus, she ing our inferiority to the great and mighty dead, showing our inferiority to the high which we occupy, the country may be destroyed and ruined; and, to the amazement of all world, the great republic may fall prostrate and in ruins, carrying with it the very hope of that iberty which we have heretofore enjoyed; carry ing with it, in place of the peace we have enjoy ed, nothing but revolution and havoc and anarchy Shall it be said that we have allowed all these evils to come upon our country, while we were engaged in the petty and small disputes and debates to which I have referred? Can it be that our name is to rest in history with this everlasting stigma and blot upon it?

Sir, I wish to God it was in my power to pre serve this Union by renouncing or agreeing to give up every conscientious and other opinion. I might not be able to discard it from my mind; am under no obligation to do that. I may retain preserve my country and give it peace, and its institutions and its Union stability, I will forego any action upon my opinions. Well now, my friends, [addressing the Republican Senators, that is all that is asked of you. Consider it well and do not distrust the result. Are you bent on evolution, bent on disunion? God forbid it cannot believe that such madness possesses the American people. This gives reasonable satisfaction. I can speak with confidence only of my own State. Old Kentucky will be satisfied with it, and she will stand by the Union and die by the Union if this satisfaction be given. Nothing shall seduce her. The clamor of no revolution the seductions and temptations of no revolution will tempt her to move one step. She has stood always by the side of the Constitution; she has always been devoted to it, and is this day. her this satisfaction, and I believe all the States | your investmen of the South that are not desirous of disunion as a better thing than the Union and the Constitu-tion, will be satisfied and will adhere to the Union, and we shall go on again in our great career of national prosperity and national glory.

But, sir, it is not necessary for me to speak to you of the consequences that will follow disunion.
Who of us is not proud of the greatness we have achieved? Dismion and separation destroy that greatness. Once disunited, we are no longer great. The nations of the earth, who have looked upon you as a formidable Power, a mighty Power, and rising to untold and immeasurable greatness in the future, will scoff at you. Your flag, that now claims the respect of the world, that protects American property in every port and harbor of the world, that protects the rights of your citizens everywhere, what will become of it? What becomes of its glorious influence? It is gone; and with it the protection of American citizens and property. To say nothing of the national honor which it displayed to all the world, the protection of your rights, the protection of your rights, the protection of your property abroad is gone with that national flag, and we are hereafter to conjure and contrive and contrive.

To say nothing of the date hereof.

In the date hereof. your property abroad is gone with that national flag, and we are hereafter to conjure and contrive different flags for our different republics, accord ing to the feverish fancies of revolutionary pa triots and disturbers of the peace of the world. No sir; I want to follow no such a flag. I want to preserve the Union of my country. We have it preserve the Union of my country. in our power to do so, and we are responsible if

I do not despair of the Republic. When I see before me Senators of so much intelligence and so much patriotism, who have been so honored that very Union which is now in question, sent here as the guardians of our national rights, and as guardians of that national flag, I cannot de--I cannot despond. I cannot but believe that they will find some means of reconciling and adjusting the rights of all parties, by concessions if necessary, so as to preserve and give more stability to the country and its institutions.

To Dr. Gates, of Louisville, Ky., is mankind indebted for having first made a practical application of this mysterious agent in the treatment of Seminal Diseases, who, after many years laborious research and experiment, finally succeeded in modifying and concentrating this subtle fluid combining it with certain valuable medicinal agents, in the form of Pastels and Pills, in such a manner as teact locally and directly on the parts affected, and by their specific virtues imparts health and vigor to the debilitated organs.
